ABOUT CAHRMA

The Canadian Aboriginal Human Resources Management Association (CAHRMA) is a non-profit organization supporting Human Resource professionals working for or providing professional Human Resource services to Aboriginal communities. Our vision is to be a driving force to build better work environments for the Aboriginal communities to facilitate profitable and sustainable companies and offer a source to the association, to Aboriginal peoples across Canada, providing HR practitioners with similar issues while building relationships to address the challenges and strengthen their communities. The Association will offer a venue for networking, connections and education that blends Human Resource practice with Aboriginal culture to assist Aboriginal peoples establishing their business practices in the Canadian community.

ABOUT THE CAHRMA CONFERENCE

Indigenous Human Resources are the foundation to healthy community agencies and businesses, so that Indigenous communities can thrive and make a strong future for the next generations. Services and processes need to be delivered within frameworks that incorporate cultural approaches and weave Indigenous worldview with employment law in way that are effective and culturally relevant to the realities of our contemporary communities today.

The reality is Human Resources needs to be adapted from colonial approaches and looked at from the lens of reconciliation and reconstruction to foster meaningful inclusion for Indigenous nations to take a meaningful place at the table of economic growth.
